Basmah bint of Saud bin Abdulaziz al Saud Princess is the youngest daughter of King Abdulaziz, founder of the Saudi state and youngest daughter of his son King Saud. She spent her first 20 years of life studying and traveling the world. In 1976, she moved to Lebanon during the civil war, and after finishing her studies, she moved to the UK with her mother. In 1983, she and her mother moved to Syria, where she studied medicine, psychology, and English at the Baalbek Arab University.

She started her career in media and journalism in 2006. At that time, she began writing for Al-Madina, Al-Hayat, Al-Ahram Al-Masri, Al-Sayadity, and other newspapers. She also wrote for Independent, Berfabl, Argeninin, Yo Donna magazine, Vanity Fair, and Huffington Post. Her articles focus on social issues in the Middle East. She is a citizen of the UK, a social activist, and a writer. She has written many articles about social issues, and she is currently working on a book about the Middle East. She is also a member of the British Society for Middle Eastern Studies.

In 2011, she moved to the UK and started working on human rights and social issues. She has been involved in many projects, and she is currently working on a book about the Middle East. She is also a member of the British Society for Middle Eastern Studies.

While living in London, Princess Basmah established The Lanterns, a charity that provides support for refugees and asylum seekers. She is also a member of the British Society for Middle Eastern Studies.

In 2013, she visited the Syrian refugee camps in Jordan and Lebanon. She was very impressed by the resilience of the refugees and their determination to rebuild their lives. She has since been involved in many projects to help refugees and asylum seekers.
