Dominique Moisi is a European representative of geographical strategy thinkers. He is a famous international science research institute (IFRI) and a famous political scientist, author, and co-founder.

He is a member of the European Council on Foreign Affairs, the Moscow Political Science Institute International Advisory Council, and a special member of the Bilderberg Group. Moisi is currently a professor at Sciences Po in Paris, the Institute of Political Studies, and a Pierre Keller Visiting Professor at Harvard University. He is also the former president of the European Geopolitics Commission and a visiting professor at King's College London.

In the 1990s, Moisi, along with Timothy Garton Ash and Michael Mertes, co-authored the article "The Three Kingdoms" (Great Britain - Germany - France), which made him famous.

He is a specialist in geopolitics and international relations, and is highly respected in the field. He has commented on the future of Europe, geopolitical trends, and the geopolitics of emotions, and is frequently requested for comment.

Moisi has written for the Financial Times, New York Times, Die Welt, Der Standard, Foreign Affairs, and many other major newspapers. He is the author of the book "The Geopolitics of Emotions: Fear, Humiliation, and the Culture of Hope" (2009), which has been translated into 20 languages.
